

THE GALLERY

Alexico Group, the developer of the new Upper East Side condo The Laurel, hosted an open house weekend to showcase the building's newest amenity spaces, The Laurel Club and The Trophy Club. Jeannie Woodbrey (right, center) and Joanie Schumacher (below, left) of Corcoran Sunshine Marketing Group welcomed guests to the building located at 400 East 67th Street. In The Laurel Club, the building's two-story, 4,000 s/f private recreational space, guests shot pool, played foosball and arcade video games, and enjoyed movies in the Club's 30-seat private theater. On the lower level in the Triathlon Training Center, a trainer was on hand to provide demonstrations of the The Laurel's cutting-edge training equipment, which includes custom designed resistance pools, Woodway "The Force" treadmills, CycleOps pro indoor cycles and SCIFIT ergo-meters. The two-story, 8,000 s/f Trophy Club offers residents extensive cardiovascular and strength training facilities and two pools, including a 50-foot infinity edge lap pool with a glass mosaic tile interior and a botticino marble deck.

Photos by Richard Lewin

Interested buyers flocked to the recent open house at the 129-unit The Laurel where, according to Streeteasy.com, there have been 35 recorded sales. "Sales at The Laurel continue to be strong and there has been a marked increase in interest in the building since the completion of The Laurel Club and The Trophy Club," said a spokeswoman.